Welcome to the Transnational Feminisms Summer Institute

July 7-11, 2014

THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY
Welcome to Ohio State University and the Transnational Feminisms Summer Institute. We were inspired by the idea of organizing a feminist summer camp, where scholars invested in cutting edge scholarship can dialogue with one another and collectively advance our knowledge. Thank you for answering our call and committing to this week-long institute.

We will begin the day with roundtables that examine broad issues in the field of transnational feminisms and then convene in the afternoon to workshop papers. We invite you to engage with one another during the roundtables, workshops, and informal get-togethers. We also plan to invite you to share your thoughts about the institute at our afternoon snack time and Thursday evening dinner.

We hope that the institute will continue in future years and explore other topics in feminist scholarship. If you and your institution are interested in organizing or co-sponsoring, please let us know.

We look forward to a week of stimulating conversation and fellowship.

Fragrance Free Policy
We ask that, in the interest of supporting our colleagues with sensitivity to alcohols and scent, perfumes or fragrances NOT be worn by participants in this workshop series. Perfumes and fragrances (including scented lotions) can negatively affect people with multiple chemical sensitive syndrome (MCS), asthma, and/or autoimmune disorders. For every 100 people in America, there is an average of 10 with asthma, 20 with an autoimmune disorder and/or 12.5 with MCS.

Gender Neutral Restrooms
There is a gender-neutral restroom located on the main floor of the Hale Black Cultural Center to the right of the main lobby when you enter from 12th avenue.

Roles and Responsibilities
Roundtable participants have been asked by the facilitators to speak to key questions from their own scholarship. They will engage in dialogue with each other and the participants in the audience.

Paper Presenters will present so that those attending their workshop and their discussant will have time to read their work. S/he will have 10 minutes to present. They will not have time to present the entire work submitted for the workshop, but should address the key points, arguments and significance of their work.

The discussant is responsible for reading the assigned paper thoroughly and carefully, and for presenting key questions, making suggestions (asking clarifying questions about points or connections; ideas for connections to other scholarship or ideas and themes), and providing written feedback (about organization, grammar) on the paper to give to the author. The discussant will have 10 minutes to present comments (which should be encouraging and positive as well as productively critical).

The moderator (and also the roundtable facilitator) has the role of keeping the discussion on track and making sure that everyone has a chance to speak. Since some people feel more comfortable than others in settings like these, we ask facilitators to keep a "progressive stack" of speakers, asking those who have already spoken in the session to wait until all others have spoken once before speaking again.

All participants, and especially the moderators, please note the breakdown of the workshop time:

- 10 minutes each, presenting papers (as people will have read them)
• 10 minutes each discussant raising specific themes (and providing specific comments to the author in writing/on the manuscript)
• 60 minutes for Q&A about the specific papers and discussion about the common themes and questions raised by workshopped papers

The roundtable and breakout session audiences will not only respond to specific points, but are also charged with thinking about the papers in relation to larger themes of transnational feminisms—whatever those may be (methods, theorizing, power, reflexivity) and ensure that the discussion be inclusive of all perspectives presented on the roundtable or in the workshop. It is important then for all participants to read the workshop papers carefully for those common themes and ways in which the papers speak to each other.

As far as practical, we ask all participants to privilege the voices of those who might easily be marginalized in academic conversations in the US—students, people from outside the US, those whose first language is not English, people of color, less senior faculty, people with disabilities—even as we recognize that not all our differences are obvious and we may not know each other well enough to practice this very well. (FN: For more on the "progressive stack" and its relationship to Jo Freeman's critique of the "tyranny of structurelessness," see truth-out.org).

9:30-11:30 AM | NEWARK, OH EARTHWORKS FIELD TRIP
Guide: Lucy Murphy
The Institute will provide a charter bus to the Newark Earthworks for those who have signed up. The Newark Earthworks are the largest set of geometric earthen enclosures in the world. In The Seventy Wonders of the Ancient World (1999), Cambridge University archeologist, Chris Scarre named the Newark Earthworks as one of only three North American sites that qualified as an ancient wonder. Professor Lucy Murphy, Associate Professor in the Department of History, will lead the group on a walking tour. She helped to create Ohio State’s Newark Earthworks Center and is a member of its Faculty Oversight Committee. Prof. Murphy teaches courses on Native American, U.S. women’s, immigration, antebellum American, and U.S. Western history.

Newark Earthworks
History and context by Daniel Rivers

Ohio Native American history is paradoxical. Today, there are no federally recognized tribes in the state, the result of removal policies that forced tribes such as the Miami, the Shawnee, the Delaware, and the Wyandot to relocate to modern-day Kansas and Oklahoma. At the same time, the state is home to some of the most important ancient indigenous sites on the American continent. The Ohio River valley was the center of a great civilization now remembered as the Hopewell Culture that existed from 200 B.C. to 700 A.D. and extended from its core in the Ohio and Illinois River valleys throughout much of Midwestern and eastern North America. The Hopewell Culture had one of its most significant ceremonial centers in Newark, Ohio. The site, the largest geometric earthwork complex in the world, is a critical part of a global indigenous past and is currently being nominated for designation as a UNESCO World Heritage Site. These centers likely served as pilgrimage sites for diverse indigenous nations across North America, a place where people from different cultures came together to gather, to honor the sacred, and to learn and share knowledge across cultural borders.

The geometric earthen enclosures connected by walled roadways of the Newark earthworks site cover more than four square miles. The Great Circle is in the town of Heath, south of Newark, and consists of a massive circular enclosure, the size of four football fields. To the northwest, in Newark, lies the Octagon Earthworks. The Great Circle and the Octagon sites were once linked by ancient walled roads. The Octagon earthworks is also connected to a smaller circle, called the Observatory circle, because it is possible to chart the lunar alignment at its northernmost point, which occurs every 18.6 years, by standing on a long low mound at one end of the circle. This discovery was made two decades ago, and we now believe that these earthworks and the other Hopewell Culture sites like it that spread throughout central and southern Ohio were large, important centers, meant for spiritual ceremony and cultural interaction. If we look at the orientation of the earthworks site, and in particular the walled roads that led from one section of it to another, we can see that they link the ceremonial center with Raccoon Creek, and thereby with the Ohio River waterway and the larger Mississippi watershed, providing access to these sites for a vast area. In addition, we have found material evidence of these connections and the movement of people between them in the mounds themselves; copper from the Upper Great Lakes, Mica from the Carolinas, shells from the Gulf of Mexico, and Obsidian from the Rocky Mountains have all been found in the mounds of the Hopewell region.

- Pedestrians (people walking) should walk on sidewalks or walk facing traffic.
- Pedestrians should cross the street at traffic signals, crosswalks or at an intersection.
- At an intersection with a pedestrian signal, cross the street when the signal shows “WALK” or a symbol of a walking person. Wait if the sign shows or is flashing “DON’T WALK” or a symbol of an open hand.
